The Castle was built in the Fifteenth century by Cardinal d'Estouteville, and the work was continued by Giuliano della Rovere, Cardinal-Archbishop of Ostia, and "Dean of the Sacred College." It served him as a refuge from the persecutions of Alexander VI., and, in his turn, when he succeeded to the Papacy as Julius II., here he held Cæsar Borgia a prisoner. The outer walls are so covered with escutcheons of their former Papal owners as to form a veritable chapter of Pontifical heraldry.

| 42 | Philippina Welser Pleading to the Emperor
Ferdinand the First | ... | ... | ... | A. Delug |

In a room of the Hradschin, at Prague, the Palace he had built, the Emperor Ferdinand the First has sat in judgment on himself, and, self-convicted, is condemned from without his own mouth. A young and beautiful woman, having gained admission by strategy, pleads for herself and two young children. She has married above her station, and the father of her husband is implacable in his resentment. The Emperor, father of his people, asks for the name of the wretch that has wrought this cruel wrong on one so beautiful, only to learn that his victim is here before him, a suppliant for mercy as for justice.

The story of Love the Leveller runs,—Philippina Welser, the most beautiful woman of her day, heiress of a patrician of Augsburg, a merchant prince, whose brother Bartholomew had held Venezuela as a lien for a loan given to Charles the Fifth—himself the rival of Fugger, the Rothschild of the Middle Ages—has yet the misfortune to be "not well born." The Archduke Ferdinand of Tyrol attending an Imperial Diet in 1550, twenty years after the famous "Confession of Augsburg" had been presented to the Emperor Charles the Fifth, saw Philippina presiding as Queen of Beauty at a tournament. To see was to love, to woo was to win, and within two years—a bridegroom of twenty-one, a bride older by a year—the pair were secretly married. Now two boys, aged respectively seven and six, Andreas and Carl, stand before their grandsire.

The painting forecasts the happy sequence; the petition one can see is granted, and full forgiveness won. Philippina, ennobled as Baroness von Zinnenburg, her mother's name, lived happily with her husband for thirty-one years in the Tyrol at the Castle of Ambras, famed for its collection now in the Lower Belvedere, Vienna, and at Innsbruck, in the Old Palace, Alte Burg, of the Counts of the Tyrol. The wife of Ferdinand had the good fortune to see her eldest son Andreas a Cardinal, and her second son Carl created Markgraf von Burgau, in whose service the great Wallenstein was page, to distinguish himself as a general in Hungary against the Turks. And now, in the Franciscan Hof Kirche of Innsbruck, in the Silver Chapel, the Mausoleum built by her husband, in two altar tombs, rest Philippina, daughter of the Burgher of Augsburg, and Ferdinand, grandson of Charles the Fifth, Count of the Tyrol, and Stadtholder of Bohemia. So "Sceptre and crown must tumble down, and in the grave be equal made, with the poor crooked scythe and spade."
